

Operation WILT

We have only one year to shift the legislative (and consequentially, the economic) landscape of America. Beyond that, we're facing the point of no return.

It will never be just about abortion laws, compulsory niqab, or the nonsensical "equality" narrative that egalitarian failures have pushed after the successes of COINTELPRO and OpChaos. This has gone far enough. We live in a surveillance state now. Men currently control everything we see and coerce everything we say and do now. As it stands, we're letting it happen. We have now, more than ever, the ability to shift the current landscape, and we're wasting the opportunity trying to fit in where we aren't welcome.

We are watching as Iran, Mexico, China, Korea, and the United States become embroiled in traditionalism, nationalism, and androterrorism. The response? Useless protests in the streets which result in nothing. Grumpy parades and quirky chants that don't do much outside of making celebrity protesters. They're not backed up by anything material. That's their mistake, but it shouldn't be ours. We don't have to adopt their failures. We don't have to look for camaraderie in them. We are very much capable of creating our own movements, communities, programs, and our own material gains, but we're failing to do so, because we're letting ourselves become absorbed into the left/right dichotomy all over again.

Democrats don't care about you. Republicans don't care about you. Leftists, communists, socialists, marxists, traditionalists, theocrats, libertarians, and all those other useless, worthless, tactless groups don't give a single fuck about YOU. They only want your votes and your support. Your mistake is hoping that they'd give you anything in return for that. Don't you think that if they cared so much, they would've joined our efforts, and followed our leadership? There's a reason they didn't. Power is a big ass club, and none of us are in it.

For decades, our votes, voices, and participation powered their campaigns, rises to power, and accumulation of wealth. What if we did that for us? Why not? We have the absolute most to lose. All of these groups are fractured distractions rife with misogyny, sexism, gynophobia, and androparasitism. It perpetuates their need to grow and exist, like cancer. It's the same reason the big charities pay more for commercials than they put towards research or social programs.

Me? I have a lot to lose, and I know you do too. The difference is, most of us can't afford to fuck each other over, and most of us who want to leave have no place to escape to. Our only option is to fight. This is how we do it:

Phase 1: Intellectual & Material Succession

(2-3 years)

The strength of this step lies in the psychological pivot. By targeting womyn who feel "politically homeless" (right-wing womyn isolated by traditionalism and leftist women isolated by empty identity politics, etc.), we'll be tapping into a massive, under-served demographic.

Step 1: Change perception

- Utilize womyn's publications like Sista Surge Media, Medusa Rising, and Total Woman Victory to capture the attention of isolated right wing womyn, blackpilled womyn, and leftist womyn feeling abandoned by their political groups.
- Funnel womyn from mainstream social media sites, to female-focused social media sites. This will shift their consciousness away from societal generalities to focusing almost exclusively on collective self-preservation and improving the global and local female condition.
- Host events to foster community between womyn who would not otherwise meet or speak with one another.
- Familiarize womyn with their neighbors, and teach them to rely more on exchanging goods and services between one another.
- Utilize polarizing figures to make our views seem more favorable.
- Organize and mobilize mutual aid, childcare, and other grassroots social programs to decrease female reliance on their male counterparts.

Step 2: Popularize Alternative Spaces & Lifestyles

- Aggressively host events and repurpose venues/abandoned properties to inspire womyn to connect with one another, and build independent (third) spaces outside of conventional means.
- Present opportunities at events to womyn of various ages, offering them social and economic mobility that is largely inaccessible in the current landscape.
- Aid womyn and girls into implementing elements of separatism in their personal and professional lives, focusing on female advancement and community as opposed to contributing to male social capital.
- Encourage womyn to forego personal relationships with males for as long as possible, at least until she has a sufficient safety net financially and socially. Discourage sacrificing professional life and economic health for male partnership.

Step 3: Initiate the Social "Opt Out"

- Utilize the "Path Of Daughters" by encouraging the adoption and mentorship of female children as opposed to birth-giving. This will reduce the numbers of isolated and abandoned young womyn with no opportunities or support systems.
- Encourage the reduction in participation in beautification rituals or other wasteful activities, exchanging them for learning textile skills and Earth stewardship.
- Create and design scholarship and grant programs to suit the above mentioned practices, as an incentive to ensure that the next generation maintains an affinity for our principles.
- Incentivize contribution to organizations focusing on womyn's material interests (volunteering, internships, employment, petitioning, donating).

Phase 2: Consolidation of Power (W.A.C.)

(1-2 years)

Phase 2 moves from social support to political infrastructure. The "Womyn's Action Committee" and the "International Womyn's Resource Initiative" will be the institutional backbone.

Step 1: Expose Womyn To Their Political Options

- Give womyn the option to get involved in local womyn's groups that explicitly support improving female conditions, as opposed to subgroups supporting currently existing major parties, or parties that prioritize male interests.
- Show womyn the necessity of female-focused advocacy by recruiting for Distro Sisters, volunteering at domestic violence shelters, and by having them join rape survivor advocacy groups.
- Connect stable womyn with homeless and transient womyn, or womyn whom have escaped the sex trade to offer them new perspectives on the direction of their advocacy, consequentially creating empathy for the womyn who have been exposed to the worst of social and state violence.

Step 2: Organize political committees

- Formally establish the Womyn's Action Committee (W.A.C.) as an alternative to left or right wing political groups.
- Emphasize the fact that womyn have more in common with each other (and more to lose) than any other demographic they may belong to. This will urge them to mobilize in the interest of improving their conditions.
- Deliver educational programs based on the political agenda, and recruit potential/future political figures who will uphold our values and mission.
- Organize womyn's resources into collective self-serving interests, reducing lost wealth to male systems and institutions (this slows wealth extraction).
- Encourage "the gatekeeper's keys" mindset to prevent unnecessary sharing with males who could potentially co-opt the mission.

Step 3: Create Material Opposition

- Organize boycotts to work in tandem with petitioning and introduction of legislation to oppose the suppression and oppression of female people (and animals if relevant).
- Invest in alternatives to boycotted entities to create competition for major violators of womyn's liberation and female self-determination.
- Emphasize that exploitation is unacceptable and non-negotiable to violating entities.
- Organize regular trips to the House Of Representatives to offer perspectives on why certain legislation should or shouldn't be passed, and to show representatives that we are prepared to walk away from and replace them with members of our own parties.
- Create a womyn's party to run against major candidates who would be dangerous to us, should they reach office.

Phase 3: Institutional Capture and Legislative Pressure

(3-5 years)

This is where the parallel society interacts with and begins to transform the existing American state. The ability to accomplish this will rely on how efficiently we can develop and deploy Phase 1. This makes Phase 1 the most fragile and most important element of the plan.

Step 1: Use political committees

- Mobilize political groups to develop lobby groups that support our interests.
- Secure investments to establish a female owned national credit union.
- Campaign aggressively for legislation which supports our interests.
- Run a local political candidate to gauge our success, and use the information for future elections and campaigns.
- Utilize influencer and celebrity platforms to increase chances of campaign successes.

Step 2: Establish & Strengthen Material Opposition

- Create local groups to aggressively campaign for legislation that supports our interests.
- Attempt the stigmatization of religious organizations and think tanks (like The Heritage Foundation) with the intention of crippling them, their motivations, or anyone who interacts with them.
- Create or exasperate divides within major parties that oppose our interests using “black web” tactics, and disruption at their events. (bots, fake accounts, publishing on their platforms under pseudonyms, mass report campaigns)

Step 3: Act quickly once office is held

- Create teams to support our elected officials to help them enact legislation favorable to us as soon as possible.
- Encourage officials to place our issues on the ballot despite their popularity.
- Introduce favorable legislation in bills alongside necessities people generally want, need, and/or agree with.

This is not new. This has been done many different ways through many different groups, which almost always results in success. Our biggest issue will be the lack of access to resources they never had to deal with. We have considerably less time, marginally fewer resources, and a whole hell of a lot less people to work with, and it can still be done. All of that starts with ensuring that we have media to act as the mouthpiece for our agenda.
